

Dual circuit breaker in China in Japan

Overview

China has announced an immediate ban on exports of dual-use goods to Japan when those items could be used for military purposes, marking a sharp escalation in trade and diplomatic friction between Asia's two largest economies. Some external commentators have hastily framed the move as a "trade restriction" or an escalation of economic friction. Such readings miss the essence of the policy. China's export ban on dual-use goods to Japan represents a sophisticated form of economic statecraft that leverages strategic material dependencies while maintaining plausible deniability through administrative mechanisms.
